INTRODUCTION

THE collection of books in Leicester which is commonly known there as the Old Town Hall Library is housed, as it has been housed ever since about the year 1633, in the upper story of that part of the Old Town Hall which faces the west end of St. Martin's Church. A bronze tablet affixed to the outer wall bears the following inscription:—

‘This is the Town Library of Leicester, erected about the year 1632, at the instance of Mr. John Angell, Public Lecturer.’

On the north side of the whole group of buildings, over the passage which leads to the little quadrangle, another bronze tablet is affixed, with the inscription:—

‘This building known as the Town Hall occupies the site of a building called “Corpus Christi Guild” and parts of the original fabric remain. It has been used for municipal purposes since the reign of H. VII.’

These tablets were placed in their respective positions somewhere about the year 1870. They represent the current tradition as to a group of buildings of more than common interest. They give the impression, to those who read them to-day, that, in the main, the buildings as a whole took the place of older buildings, once the property of Corpus Christi Guild, and that, in particular, the part used as a Library was erected at the date given.

When, however, the buildings themselves are allowed to tell their own story, and the accounts of the Corporation are searched to see if they throw any light on the matter, it is soon found that such an impression does not quite accord with the facts.

To begin with the witness of the building itself. If we pass through the passage over which the second tablet is placed into the quadrangle, the dwelling-house opposite is evidently of comparatively modern date and need not detain us. On the right hand we have the western side of the quadrangle—the beautiful panelled room, known as the Mayor's Parlour, on the ground floor, which has been recently described as ‘a typical example of the manner in which the chief apartments of a fine house were adorned in the early part of the seventeenth century'. On viewing this room and that above it we find, along with abundant evidence of the work of adornment done at that time, traces of earlier work, not only in the glass which fills the windows and contains many times repeated the cognizance of the Guild, but in some of the stonework, especially in the upper story. The general impression left, however, is that, whatever may have been preserved, the work of the seventeenth century practically amounted, in this part of the building, to a fairly thorough renovation.

But when we pass from the Mayor's Parlour into the Great Hall, once the place where Assizes were held, and still bearing signs of such use, the main features of the fabric tell a different story. The substantial part, the walls and the roof, belong to the middle of the fifteenth century. The panelling at the back of the dais is of about the same date as the Mayor's Parlour. The rail in front of the gallery at the East end—from which gallery a persistent, if rather unsubstantial, tradition says that Queen Elizabeth watched the performance of one of Shakespere's plays—belongs in character to about the year 1720, and the same date may be assigned to the gallery overlooking the dais in front of what was used as the Grand Jury room.

A staircase leads from the quadrangle to the upper story of the eastern part. We pass through a room now used by the Leicestershire Architectural and Archaeological Society into the Library, which is divided from this room by a modern wooden partition. Here the general characteristics are the same as in the western portion. The panelling of both rooms is of about the same date (1637) as that which is in embossed letters on the carved fire-place in the Mayor's Parlour; the beams were cased about the middle of the same century. Yet everything inside and out points not so much to 'erection' or even 'rebuilding' as to 'adornment' and 'improvement'.

The general indications of such a survey are, that substantially what is known as the Old Town Hall is the older home of the Guild of Corpus Christi, 'restored', as we should say in our day, but not rebuilt, the signs and results of 'restoration' being more marked and prominent in some parts than in others.

The Records of the Borough, especially the Chamberlains' Accounts, which are very clear and well kept, tend to confirm the story told by the building itself.

We find from a study of them, first, that while the Hall of the Guild of Corpus Christi was used, from time to time, by the Corporation even in the fourteenth century, it was not purchased until some time during the reign of Queen Elizabeth. One of the conditions of purchase was the continuance of a yearly payment of 7*s.* 9*d.*

This was continued year by year, and is entered almost invariably as 'for Corpus Christi Hall alias the Town Hall', at least until the year 1775.

Next, and chiefly, the actual account of what was expended on the Library in 1633 speaks for itself and may be given in full :—

The total is £10 15s. 3d., or, perhaps, £60 according to present value—not enough for the erection of the building but enough for the necessary repairs and furniture, not forgetting the cost of removing the books from St. Martin's and the usual 'bread and beere' on the occasion.

The accounts for the work done in 1637 are too lengthy to be given here. The total amount expended was £224 14s. 3d., equivalent to more than £1,100 of our money, and it is expressly said that this covers 'the Charges of newe-building the parlor of the Towne Hall and of the Chamber over it and the buildings adjoining to it'. At first reading this might seem to show that it was after all a work of erection which was carried out, not in 1633 but a few years later. But apart from the fact, about which there can be no mistake, that the books were actually removed from St. Martin's to the Library at the earlier date, the costliness of the work known to have been carried out in the Mayor's Parlour only allows for improvements and adornments to the other parts of the whole group of buildings, and not for their re-erection.

On the whole it seems clear that, no doubt unintentionally, both the tablets are rather misleading, and that the old Hall of the Guild of Corpus Christi is still standing, though in several parts, and notably in the Mayor's Parlour, it bears witness to the liberal improvements, adaptations, and renovations carried out, especially in the earlier part of the seventeenth century, by the Corporation, whose property it had become some half-century earlier. Tradition says that the room adapted and adorned for use as the Library had previously been occupied by the priests who ministered at the Altar of the Guild in St. Martin's Church.

In the list of 'Charges about the Librarie', reprinted from the Borough Accounts in the year 1632, there is a payment 'for carrying the bookes out of the Chauncell into the Librarie'. The Chancel meant is that of St. Martin's Church. The accounts of that church, still preserved, as well as the Accounts and Hall Papers of the Borough, show by many entries that books known as 'the Library' had been there for some years, first in the belfry and afterwards in the Chancel, and that the Borough authorities were in part, at least, responsible for the care of them. There are records during several years before 1632 of gifts of books, of the appointment of library keepers, of sums voted both for necessary repairs and furniture, and for the purchase of books, coincident in point of time with similar entries in the Church accounts.

Who first suggested the plan of removing the books from the church and of preparing a room for them in Corpus Christi Hall cannot now be discovered. A board affixed to the partition between the room where the books now rest and the room occupied by the Archaeological Society ascribes its existence, rightly enough, to the Corporation, adding that what was done was 'upon the Motion of the Right Revd Father in God John Lord Bishop of Lincoln and by the Promotion of Mr John Angell Publick Lecturer of this Borough'.

It is, perhaps, somewhat hard to decide the relative value of 'upon the Motion' and 'by the Promotion', but there is ample proof that both Mr. Angell, resident in Leicester, and Bishop Williams, the Bishop of the diocese of which Leicester then formed a part, were zealous and active in bringing about the removal of the old Library and the preparation and furnishing of the new.

A Latin inscription on one of the books states that it was presented to the Library by John Angell, who for some time had been 'moderator juventutis Leicestriae', in other words, Master of the Free School there. In the year 1626 Angell was one of the candidates for the office of Public Preacher, and was eventually elected. A recommendatory letter in his favour was presented to the Mayor and 'his brethren' from 'the Ministers and Schoolemasters of the Town'. Among the signatures to this letter are those of Thomas Holmes, Francis Higginson, John Bonnett, John Ilyff, and Richard Richardson, names which are found written on volumes still preserved in the Library. Francis Higginson in particular has left sufficient notes in his own hand to show that he was both a lover of books and a generous donor.

At a meeting of 'Mr Maior and his brethren' the vth day of September 4. Chas. I. 1628 'it is agreed by a generall consent that Mr Angell shall have v^{li} forth of the Chamber of the Towne for his Chardges goinge to London for the obtayninge of the Bishop's licence for the weekly lecture and buying books for the library'. Apparently he did not vacate the office of schoolmaster by becoming Public Lecturer, but held both until 1634, when he was suspended through the action of Laud. He remained in Leicester until 1650, and was afterwards Public Preacher at Grantham, where he died in 1655.

A charming letter from Anthony Cade, Vicar of Billesdon, also a very liberal donor to the Library, who was a friend of Bishop Williams and Chaplain to the Duke of Buckingham, gives an attractive picture both of the writer and also of Angell, on whose behalf it was written. The original, in a very beautiful hand, is preserved in the Hall Papers. Petitions had been sent from a large number of the citizens asking that Angell's salary as Master of the Free School might be increased by £10 a year, and Anthony Cade writes in support of this same request.

Right Worll. With my very respective salutations and profession of the love and reverence which I beare unto you and the whole Company of y^r Corporation, and the whole towne of Leicester: I crave leave thus to write unto you. I was desired the last yeare about this time by M^r Maior and some others of the Company, to come to Leicester and vpon some triall to deliver my judgem^t of M^r Angel then in y^r deliberation to be made y^r Schoolmaster. I willingly came and happily found him very sufficient, and vpon delivery of my opinion of him, he was intertayned, and hath continued this yeare in the place with you. I have since the time of his placing bene inquisitive of his diligence, and satisfaction which hee gave. I have alwayes heard well of him in every regard, to his great comēdation, my great contentm^t, and the credit, honour, and flourishing of y^r schoole. Now I have heard lately, that for fayling of some promise to augm^t his entertaynm^t Ten pounds by yeare (wherof hee was at the first assuredly psuaded) you are likely to lose him. But lett my love to you all, and to the Country about you, challenge mee this priviledge and bouldnes, to counsel you not to lose so tryed and worthy a man for such a matter. I hould a good schoolmaister one of the best Jewels, and most necessary men (next after the Guides of our Soules to heaven) which the Comon welth can have, to p[er]fit and polish with his hand the best Jewels which God geves us, our Children: w^h if they be not polished and p[er]fited in their due times, their times are unrecoverably lost, and their persons too, or at least, lose much of their luster. And therefore such Jewels (or Jewelers) cannot be bought to deare. I know also such good polishers of such rare Jewels (as we ought to account our children) are not very ordinary, but either they fail in skill, diligence, or conscience. In none of which (I hope) you can taxe this Angell. And we all know also, that the world is not as it hath bene: the prices of all things are raised, and so must in aequity bee the stipends and entertaynm^t of men (as all things are w^h they must buy). Besides, it is not for the honour of such a Corporation, to have it sayd that you have lost such an approved worthy Instrum^t of y^r good for such a matter; or that you are content with others farre worse (at least untryed) so you may have them cheaper. ffar be it from you. And for a conclusion, it may bee, some will repent if they geve so much: but I think verily you will all repent if you do otherwise. If I bee too bould with you, I pray and beseech you let my love crave pardon for my bouldness. Thus

After reading such an appeal in the Hall Papers it is pleasing to find immediately afterwards the record that as on August 7, 1629, the 'four and twentie', i.e. 'Mr Maior and his companie', having been duly called together, Mr. Angell was voted the addition to his 'entertaynmt' of £10 a year.

The extracts from the Borough records which have been given are sufficient to suggest that in the Leicester of the earlier part of the seventeenth century there were a number of friends bound together, if not in all cases by unity of political and religious convictions, certainly by the love of learning and a care for books. Angell was one of them; an earnest, thoughtful man with strong beliefs but interests wider than his beliefs. We can understand the encouragement and support he received from those of like tastes and interests in 'promoting' a change which in those days might be expected to lead to the advancement of learning.

If Leicester was fortunate in the man by whose 'promotion' the new Library was formed, it was at least equally fortunate in the Bishop upon whose 'motion' the Mayor and his brethren acted. The career and character of John Williams, Dean of Westminster, Bishop of Lincoln, Archbishop of York, and the last clergyman to hold the office of Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England, are full of incident and interest.

His action in regard to the matter of the chancel of St. Martin's Church is referred to in many historical works dealing with the period.

For the present purpose it will be best to give the Bishop's own letter to the Mayor in full. It was not included by Mr. J. C. Jeaffreson in his report on the Leicester Borough Records for the Historical Manuscripts Commission, but was published from the State Papers by Mr. B. H. Beedham in his Notices of Archbishop Williams, printed for private distribution in 1869. The copy preserved in the Hall Papers differs from this in a number of unimportant details. Neither is a holograph but the Leicester copy is written in a very neat hand and has the Bishop's own signature.

After my verye heartiest Commendacons and best wishes unto you. I thanke you right heartilye and all the Towne of Leicester for your great care and charge in providinge and adorninge soe convenient a place for the Librarye there and especiallye for your resolution upon the motion I made unto you to returne the old Roome unto that Religious use it was formerlye buylded and designed for weh is, to be the Chauncell or Quire of y^r ffaire and Beautifull Church. I praye you take yo^r owne time between this and All Sainctes to remooove the Bookes into the newe place provided for them and to trimme up and adorne the other Roome for your Chauncell both with faire doores to open into yo^r Church and some steps or ascents at the upper end thereof for yo^r Communion Table to stand in, att such tymes as it shall not bee used in the participation of those Sacred mysteries, ffor att those tymes the Lawe doth appointe it shalbe sett in the most convenient place either the Chauncell or Bodye of the Church whereunto the people maye have best accesse and where the Minister that officiates maye be most audiblye heard, weh as I am informed is the place where it stood before. Lett it therefor att such tymes be placed there again untill by complaint made of the Minister or Churchwardens of the inconveniency thereof I shall give order to the Contrarye. Onely both then and att all other tymes my earnest suite unto you is, that yo^r Table maye be fairely covered and adorned wheresoever it stands, that whereas all men that are not extremelye malicious must needes commend yo^r wise and discreete manadginge of yo^r Civill, idle people maye have noe occasion to taxe yo^r disposinge of Church Affaires. And I assure you that a little charge in this kinde wold bee well placed being a thinge acceptable to God, to the Kinge and to all good People.

Nowe for the Buysiness of the Librarye, if you shall be pleased to make as good a stypend as you can spare to the Keeper thereof, I doe not doubt but by the Nobleneß and Charitee of the Nobilitye and Gentrye and Clergye of the Country the Stalles will fill a pace and that you shall receive much Comfort every waye, from this worthie and pious worke of yours. These.

The fact that the greater part of this letter deals with the matter of the Chancel of St. Martin's, the proper uses for it and the lawful position of the Communion Table, led no doubt to the suggestion in local histories that the Bishop's care was for the Church rather than for the Library.

This, however, is a mistake. Williams was one of the great booklovers of the time, and vied with his great opponent, Archbishop Laud, in his generous liberality towards places of learning. 'One of the best points in his character,' it has been said, 'as in Laud's, was his readiness to befriend individual men of learning and learned foundations.'

Of this generosity it will be sufficient to cite two conspicuous examples. One of the noblest of his many benefactions was the founding of a new Library in his own College, St. John's, Cambridge. His offer was first made anonymously, but afterwards he revealed himself as the benefactor, and in the end the total sum he expended on the building alone is stated in the Baker MSS. in the Harleian Collection to have been over £2,500.

Readers of Dean Stanley's Memorials of Westminster will recollect the charming extract from Hackett's Life of Williams which, after describing in glowing words his care for the music of the Abbey, goes on to tell of his provision of a Library (still in existence) and of his gifts to it.

'With the same generosity and strong propension of mind to enlarge the boundaries of learning he converted a waste-room, situate in the East side of the Cloisters, into Plato's Portico, into a goodly Library, modelled it into decent shape, furnished it with desks and chairs, accoutred it with all utensils, and stored it with a vast number of learned volumes. . . . When he received thanks from all the professors of learning in and about London, far beyond his expectations, because they had free admittance to seek honey from the flowers of such a garden as they wanted before, it compelled him to unlock his cabinet of jewels, and bring forth his choicest manuscripts. A right noble gift in all the books he gave to this SERAPEUM, but especially the parchments. Some good authors were conferred by other benefactors, but the richest fruit was shaken from the boughs of this one tree, which will keep green in an unfading memory in spite of the tempest of iniquity.'

These larger benefactions to learning belong to an earlier period of Williams' life, that to Cambridge to the years 1623-4, and that to Westminster to 1626. But in 1632-3 his 'propension of mind' was equally strong in the like direction.

In addition to sending his 'poor mite of Ten poundes to helpe to furnishe a parte of a stall'—a gift equivalent to at least £50 of our money—the Bishop wrote a letter to the Lord-Lieutenant of the County, Henry Hastings, Fifth Earl of Huntingdon, which is preserved in the State Papers (S. P. Dom. Car. I. vol. 246. No. 41). It is worth quoting, if only because it is almost sufficient to clear up all doubt as to whether a building was erected in 1632-3, or a room fitly provided.

To the right hon^{ble} my very good Lo: the Earle of Huntingdon.

Right honorable and my most noble Lord: my best respects to yo^r good Lo^{pp}. and my most hon^{ble} Lady remembred. Whereas the Towne & Corporacon of Leicester being the shiretowne of that County hath been pleased piously to provide and furnish a fayre and decent Roome for a Library in that place, and to allot some meanes to maynteyne a Keeper of the Bookes that shalbe there sett up, which is like to prove not onely a great Benefitt and Comfort to all the Clergie of that remote and inland County, but withall a matter of greate conveniency to the gentrye thereabouts, and an Ornament to all the Shire.

My humble suite vnto yo^r good Lpp. is, that God hath made yo^r Lpp: a personage of that great Eminencie, and equall pietie in those parts, soe that you wold be pleased to recomend this charitable worke, vnto the worthie Knights and gentlemen of the Countrey, to contribute for the furnishinge of this Roome with Bookes in such moderate manner as their owne devotion and inclinacōn shall hold fitting and Convenient. ffor I doe conceive that a small contribucōn will doe the business. And yo^r Lpp. shall not onely oblige me very much in this favoure, who am, in my Brethren of the Clergie, to partake of the future advantage, but shall doe, as I perswade my selfe, a very acceptable service therein to God and his Church.

And soe recomending humbly this Busines to yo^r Lpp. and your Lpp. in my prayers to God's proteccion I remaine Yo^r Lpps. most humble seru^t.

Jo: LINCOLN.

Buckden
18 Sept. 1633.

At the same date he wrote to Dr. Travers, the Rector of Thurcaston, probably his Commissary or Official for the Archdeaconry, requesting him to use his efforts in soliciting the aid of the Clergy in their respective Deaneries. This letter does not seem to have been preserved. The State Papers (Cal. S. P. Dom. 1633-4, p. 392) give a summary of what Dr. Travers wrote. He speaks of the 'pious design of his Lordship who, being a great blessing to the places and times wherein he lives, is both studious of the same and actually has advanced it by many memorable good works, and deserves that his memory should be for ever blessed. Having been happy in works of the like nature in other places, and now beginning a like work among them, many reasons there be which should move them to go after him to that work, the charge and care whereof redound to him, the use and profit to them. The body politic of Leicester lend their helping hand. They have provided the lay part of a library, which is their proper, namely the body and case; mutual love and correspondency require of the persons addressed that they should animate that body and fill that case with books. He urges them by various considerations to water that which others have planted. He is to give account to the Bishop, by the bearer, and requests them to return their answers by the same person.'

The efforts of Mr. Angell and his friends, supported in these ways by a great Bishop, who was himself such a generous patron of learning, resulted in liberal gifts both of money and books. The list of the donors in Nichols' History need not now be repeated. It includes the names of Heyrick of Beaumanoir, Farnham of Quorndon, Hazlerig of Noseley, Pulteney of Misterton and Turvile of Normanton Turvyle, amongst the county families, many of the citizens of Leicester, with the Mayor and the Master of Wyggeston's Hospital at their head, and many also of the country clergy, including Anthony Cade of Billesdon and Richard Rustat of Barrow-on-Soar.

In all probability the number of books at first was not large. On a liberal estimate those enumerated in Nichols under the names of the respective donors would be under 300, and if 100 more volumes (also a liberal estimate) be allowed for the remains of the old parochial library removed from St. Martin's Church, the total would be comparatively small. John Angell, who had been appointed Keeper of the Library, is stated to have made a classified catalogue of them to which he affixed the mottoes:—

Qualis cujuscunque animi affectus, talis est homo.

Ubi amor, ibi oculus.

This, however, is not one of the rich store of documents which in Leicester have survived the times when such records received little care. It is impossible to say whether or not it included the generous bequest which, a few years after the Library was founded, enriched it with some of its choicest treasures and which must now be mentioned.

In the year 1645, under the will of Thomas Hayne, a native of Thrussington--- who for some years had been resident in London as a master at Merchant Taylors' School and, later, usher at Christ's Hospital---Leicester received several legacies, and amongst them the following, which may best be stated in the terms of the will itself.

The part of the will which disposes of his books begins with bequests to his nephew 'Mr. Abraham Hayne, Preacher, my Montanus interlinear Bible and Junius and Tremelius his latine Bible and Doctor Willetts Synopsis', and 'to Mr. Richard Hayne my brother the booke of Martirs in three volumes'. The will then proceeds :—

'I give and bequeath Master Hugh Broughtons works in fower volumes in quarto, and one finale booke of the lesser treatise bound in russett leather, and his comēt on the Revelation, and his large comment in vellum with manie notes written therein, to the library in Westminster Colledge there to be kept for ever.'

'I give and bequeath all my other books whatsoever not above menconed and bequeathed, to the Mayor and Aldermen and Corporation of Lester to bee kept and reserved for ever in a public Library there already made or to bee made hereafter. Item I give for and towards the carryinge of my said bookes to the said Library fower pounds.'

The will was executed on September 28, 1640. Hayne died on July 27, 1645, and his will was proved on August 11. In regard to certain legacies to the town for the purpose of enabling the Mayor and Corporation to nominate to two exhibitions at Lincoln College, Oxford, from which he had graduated, the will provided that they should 'not bee payde or delivered to the said Colledge untill the present warres and distractions of Kingdome shall bee ended and Students settled peaceably in the Universities'. No such provision is found as to the legacies of books and the one to Leicester took effect within a few months. The Hall Papers contain letters from Mr. John Hayne, the brother and executor, dated October 4 and 10, 1645, and in the accounts of John Hynde and William Francke, Chamberlains of the Borough for 1645-6, the entry is to be found :—

'pd for the carridge of Mr. Hayne's books from london and other charges as appears by bill x^{li} ix^s iiij^d'.

A later letter from John Hayne speaks of 'an inventorie' as having been sent, but

Amos. Williams

*The Right Rev. John Williams, DD. Bishop of Lincoln

his and the 'bill of chardges' have both disappeared, and the inventories attached to wills proved in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury are wanting for that one month (August) in the year 1645. If, then, the question be asked whether Thomas Hayne's books can be identified in the Library at the present day, the answer is, in the first place, that a few certainly can. The well-known Codex Leicestrensis has his autograph on the first folio, together with the autograph (in Greek characters) of William Chark; another autograph of Thomas Hayne was discovered in making the present catalogue, on the last page of a book or tract by Gibutius among some half illegible scribbling. In the next place the fact that Hayne's autograph and that of William Chark occur on the Codex makes it all but certain that another book bearing Chark's autograph (also in Greek characters) was part of Hayne's legacy. Further, the extracts from the will, as well as a letter to Bodley's Librarian preserved at Oxford (MS. Bodl. Add. A. 64, fol. 133), show that the works of Hugh Broughton were held by him in high esteem, and it is reasonable to conclude that those of Broughton's works now in the Library (and also a work now missing which was in the Library in 1669) were part of his bequest. Nichols tells us, on the authority of MS. details before him which cannot now be found, that Hayne owing to lameness had been a student from his Oxford days, that he was 'a noted critic and excellent linguist and a solid divine, beloved of learned men and particularly respected of Selden'; also, that 'the books he bequeathed to Leicester were more than 600 in number, including some rare MSS. and many school books'. It is worthy of note, in view of this statement, that the Library contains now a good many books which bear the marks of having been used in schools, including a Latin Grammar with Ben Jonson's autograph and motto. If we take the number of books before Hayne's bequest at 400, even if allowance be made for the many losses during the eighteenth century and possibly later, there must be still about half at least of Hayne's bequest on the shelves at the present day.

No local tradition has survived as to what influence secured Hayne's interest. He had a relative who was Rector of Leire in the County, and who has himself recorded the relationship on the Title-page of a book which he himself presented. Possibly Hayne may have heard in this way of what was being done on the motion and with the approbation of Bishop Williams. Yet as Williams held the Deanery of Westminster with his Bishopric, and had done so much, a few years before, for the Library there, Hayne, who clearly had an interest in that Library, may have been moved to further the work done by Williams in Leicester, by knowing what Williams had done for 'Westminster Colledge', or even by his own personal enjoyment in sucking honey from the flowers in that 'goodly Serapeum'.

A collection of books which has seen but little change and comparatively few additions since the year 1669, cannot fail to have an interest of its own. Whether the catalogue compiled by Angell had been lost in the Civil War or had been taken away by him in 1650, when he could not take the 'Engagement' of the Independents and, being dismissed from the Confraternity of Wyggeston Hospital, left Leicester for Grantham, another Catalogue was written in 1669, which still exists. This is practically a hand-list, giving short Titles and years of publication, with, sometimes but not always, the places of publication also. Comparing this list with the books now on the shelves, it is a matter of great regret that the Library was not better safeguarded in the past, and that careless handling and worse have very seriously impaired the present value of the collection as a whole. More than 100 volumes are now wanting, and these include what, if they were still in the Library, would be among its choicest treasures.

A further subject of regret is that many of the books now on the shelves have either lost their title-pages or have been deprived of the lower part of them, containing generally an illustration, either emblematical or historical, which presumably was desired by some collector, and was accordingly cut out. Extra-illustrating, which was at one time quite a passion with book-collectors, has been the cause of the mutilation and partial destruction of a great number of choice and valuable books, and a public collection such as this would be peculiarly liable to the raids of unprincipled persons, who, perhaps, judged that they had some justification in the fact that nobody cared for 'musty old folios'. The compilers of this new Catalogue have had no little difficulty in some cases in assigning proper dates to books which have been ill-treated in this way. Fair wear and tear is, of course, responsible for a good deal of damage, but when the loosening of the pages of some of the books, or the broken state of the binding, has made repairs necessary, the directions to the binder have not been always correctly given, and the lettering is in consequence very inaccurate.

Enough has been said by way of regret for the past, its carelessness, and its mistakes. A much pleasanter task is to turn to the treasures which still remain, and to point out some of the features of general interest.

First, no doubt, among the Library's treasures is the Cursive MS. of the New Testament known to the learned as the CODEx LEICESTRENSIS. Except that the beginning is wanting, and the last leaves seriously defective, this MS. is in excellent condition, and has escaped the injury that has befallen a beautiful (?) thirteenth-century MS. of the Vulgate, viz. the snipping away of a large number of the blank lower portions of its vellum leaves. The text, however, seems to have been hardly touched, and it is a beautiful specimen of caligraphy. Noteworthy also is a volume of miscellaneous tracts of the thirteenth century bound together. Several of them are imperfect, and they are of varying interest. The book was sent some years since to the British Museum and examined by the late Sir F. Madden, whose report seems to be incorporated in the list of contents now to be seen at the end of the volume. The contents are partly theological, partly grammatical, partly general. A treatise on dreams, attributed to the prophet Daniel, is among the more curious items.

Another MS. still remaining of those which the Library once possessed is one in English of 212 folios which has been re-backed and lettered 'Wycliffe's Sermons in MS.' It consists of short postils for the Sundays of the year.

These MSS. with a few books have been kept for some years past in the strong room at the present Town Hall.

Passing from these to the Collection still in the old Town Hall, Theology is the strongest subject represented and that of the Reformers more strongly than that of their opponents.

Conspicuous among the Bibles is Walton's Polyglott (London, 1657) (containing the Commonwealth not the Royalist dedication), with the Lexicon Orientale, by Golius and Castell. Wechel's editions of Tremellius, Junius and Beza's version, in folio, and also of the LXX and New Testament in Greek (1582), are present but injured. There is the New Testament, Vulgate version, with notes of Arias Montanus (Geneva, 1619); the LXX version of the Old Testament printed at Paris in 1628, and Daniel's Cambridge edition of the New Testament (1542), while of English versions there are 'Cranmer's' (1553), and 'The Bishops' (1595). The Geneva version (1599), the Authorized (1648), and 'Tindal's' Bible (so mentioned in the hand-list of 1669) seem now to be missing.

Of the Greek and Latin Fathers we cannot expect, and do not find the critical Benedictine editions, either folio or quarto, but there is a noble copy of Savile's edition of St. Chrysostom (Greek Text) only printed at Eton, in eight volumes folio (1612, 13). Of the same Father there is also the edition of Ducaeus of Bordeaux (Greek and Latin) in six volumes, folio (Paris), and the Latin only in five volumes (1556). Piscator's edition of St. Athanasius (Greek and Latin).

Paris, 1627, in two volumes, is marred by the mutilation of the first Title. Clement of Alexandria (Paris, 1529, two volumes) has also one Title mutilated, also the Basle Edition of 1718. St. Ambrose is the Paris edition of 1549, injured at the beginning; St. Augustine, ten volumes in six, is the Basle edition of 1556; St. Basil (Greek and Latin), Basle, 1540; St. Jerome, nine volumes in four, is from the famous Froben press, Basle, 1553; St. Gregory the Great is the Antwerp edition of 1615; St. Gregory Nazianzen is represented by both the Aldine edition of 1553, in a fine leather binding with heraldic devices, and in the Greek only of Hervagius (Basle, 1550), also in a fine stamped leather cover.

Among books printed in the fifteenth century may be noticed:—

ANTHONINUS FLORENTINENSIS, Summe Pars Tertia (of St. Thomas Aquinas), printed by Peter Trach of Spire, 1488. In the original binding, re-backed, slightly imperfect.

ANTONIUS DE BUTRIO, Lectura de translatione Prelatorum. Venice, Bernardinus de Novaria. 1485.

Bound in the same volume with the last is JOHANNES DE IMOLA, Opus in Clementinas, Venice, John of Cologne and 'Johannes Manthen Geretzem, 1480.' A beautiful copy, but wanting the first leaf.

LEGENDA AUREA . . . quae lombardica nominatur historia. A very early instance of a Title-page, which is of excellent execution, as are also the initial capitals. It has the badge of 'Jaques Huguetan, libraire en Lyon', and a colophon stating that the book is for sale at Lyons and in Paris. [1476.]

Incipit liber dans modum legendi ABBREVIATURAS, Peter Levet in the University of Paris, 1490. A rare book.¹

HENRY HERP (Franciscan), Speculum aureum decem preceptorum dei. Printed at Nuremberg by Antony Koburger, 1481.

THOMAS DE ARGENTINA (of Strasburg) super quattuor libros Sententiarum. Printed by Martin Flach, Strasburg, 1490. A fine copy, perfect and with uncut edges, original binding of stamped leather over wooden boards.

Commentaries on Holy Scripture are largely represented. HUGO CARDINALIS, in six beautiful folio volumes by Antony Koburger at Nuremberg, 1498 to 1504, claims the first rank. Others can only be barely mentioned. JANSENIUS, Paraphrase on the Psalms, Canticles and Ecclesiastes, Louvain, 1574; CORNELIUS A LAPIDE, in seven volumes, Antwerp and Lyons, 1615-1635, sadly mutilated, most of the Titles having disappeared. CARDINAL CAIETAN on the Gospels, Paris, 1540; CALVIN'S Commentaries on the Bible, Geneva, 1563-1617; ERASMUS' Paraphrase on the New Testament, Basle, 1541; MENDOÇA on the Kings, three volumes, Lyons, 1633; LUTHER, MALDONATUS, MARLORATUS, OECOLAMPADIUS, PAREUS, PELLICANUS, PISCATOR, TOLETUS, ZUINGLIUS, and others.

Of Ecclesiastical History there are the two great collections of Margarinus de la Bigne, Paris, 1624. The Titles representing a ship are mostly gone. There is also Concilia Generalia et Provincialia (Greek and Latin), Severinus Binius, four volumes in five, Cologne, 1618.

Controversial Theology of course has its considerable place. Under the name of Arminius there is an 8vo volume of Disputations embracing a great part of Theology, and there are two books on Arminianism, printed in London, 1626, one of them by H. Burton. One Brandius introduces lengthy Conferences of Dutch Ministers on the subject of Predestination and the Remonstrants, 1615-18. There are also several 4to and 8vo volumes of Tracts relating to the different controversies in the English Church between 1613 and 1694.

School-books, though many have been lost, still form a considerable class.

Of Dictionaries and Lexicons there are two by Ambrose Calepin. His Lexicon, diligently corrected and published at Basle in 1530, and his Pentaglottos in Latin, Greek, German, Flemish and French, Antwerp, 1546. Thomas Cooper's Latin-English Dictionary, London, 1545, long the popular Latin Dictionary in England, is in good preservation. There are also Stephanus's Latin and French Dictionary, Paris, 1561, and Suidas' Greek Lexicon, two volumes, Geneva, 1619. There is a fine copy of Erasmus's Moriae Encomium revised by the author (Froben, Basle, 1522), in a choice stamped leather binding, and the same author's Familiar Colloquies (Basle, 1559), De recta . . . pronunciatione (Basle, 1528), and De copia verborum et rerum, a London edition of which the Title is missing.

Of editions of the Classics may be noted:—Caesar (Basle, 1591), Cicero, Opera (Paris, 1554), and separate editions of De Oratore, Orationes, &c. Virgil, with wood-cut illustrations (Leipsic, 1596), Terence, a Lyons edition of 1560, and the Heautontimoroumenos (Frankfort, 1592). Of Tacitus there is no copy in the original, but Grenewey's Translation (London, 1605). Of Horace also there is no copy, nor of Juvenal, but there is an Index of words occurring in the Satires. Plautus is represented by a Basle edition of 1523; Plato also by an edition at the same place in 1556, and another, with Ficinus's translation (Frankfort, 1602). Of Aristotle there is an interesting folio volume without place or year, but c. 1490, which contains Commentaries on his works De Coelo et mundo, the Physics, and others. There are also editions of this Philosopher—complete works (Greek and Latin), two volumes in four, sine loco, 1597, Organum, Hanover, 1611, and the Ethics, beginning wanting (c. 1530). Thucydides in the original is Wechel's edition, Frankfort, 1594, and there is a copy of Hobbes' Translation of which the Title is missing. Iamblichus, 1598, Isocrates, 1502, Appian, 1592, and an Aldine edition of Athenaeus (editio princeps) may also be mentioned.

The medical works, with some few exceptions, were not part of the original library or of the earlier gifts to it. They were presented by Mr. Richard Ludlam of Leicester late in the seventeenth century, and many of them bear his autograph. A competent judge in such matters has described them as 'an average seventeenth-century collection'. In all probability it has suffered, like other classes in the Library, by being 'culled over'.

Among rare, out of the way books or tracts one may notice:—

The Seduction of Arthington by Hackett especially with some tokens of his unfeigned repentance, London (1592); Cygnaeus (Eusebius), Conspicilium Notitiae inserviens oculis aegris—on the Rosicrucians—1619; Pauli de Didis, Sophia Panaretos, a chronogram giving the date, 1618; Neuhausius (Petrus), Pia & utilissima admonitio, 1618; and Kirstenius (Peter), of Breslau, Grammatica Arabica, &c., Breslau, 1608, 10, 11, with an appreciation of the author by certain reverend men, 1611. This last may be considered one of the choicest books in the whole collection. It is in splendid condition. One hardly knows whether to admire most the beautifully engraved Title-page or the typical perfection of the whole work. It appears to have been the first attempt at an Arabic Grammar, and the Arabic type had to be cut under the author's immediate direction. In one note he apologizes for shortcomings in spite of his best exertions. The work may well have inspired Archbishop Laud with his zeal towards the Arabic language, of which Oxford University and the Bodleian Library have reaped the lasting benefit. In this work the dates are indicated by Chronograms.

A rare collection of Tracts was printed at Basle in 1561. The first by Joannes de Rupescissa is on the five essences of all things; then follow Arnald de Villanova, De Sanguine humano distillato, Savonarola, De aqua vitae, &c. Very rare also are the two early editions of Seton's Dialectica, 1563 and 1570.

A specially choice volume may also be noted—Pharmacopoeia Bruxellensis (1641), followed by the Statutes of the Brussels College of Physicians.

The catalogue of an old library in a provincial town must be in part of the nature of a guide-book if it is to be of use to the residents and the visitors. For men who have a thorough knowledge of books, all that is needed is an accurate list with dates, places, and sufficient descriptions, in the usual abbreviated forms. But for those who lack this knowledge and yet have a certain interest in books and in what has come down from the past, a larger fullness of detail is needed, if the interest is to be maintained and the avenues of inquiry kept open. It is for such persons chiefly that this catalogue has been prepared. While doing their best to ensure accuracy on the points which are essential the compilers have endeavoured to give such full and detailed facts as may make it comparatively easy for any local student, of any degree, to follow his bent, if he is specially interested in anything which the Library contains. For this reason they have noted the badges and devices, with their mottoes and legends, which were adopted by printers in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and in some cases the quaint conceits of early printed books in other respects. They have also been specially careful to transcribe, or at all events call attention to, whatever they have found in MS. on any part of the books.

This has led to some interesting discoveries in the course of their work.

The undoubted autograph of Ben Jonson, already referred to, was recognized by Prebendary Deedes some years since, when he was on a visit to Leicester, and the autographs of Thomas Hayne and William Chark on the Codex are noted in Dr. Rendel Harris's work on that MS. published in 1887. But discoveries during the work of preparation include two autographs of the Earls of Huntingdon, who were so closely connected with the Borough in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, a second autograph of William Chark, together with many inscriptions on books given, such as those of representatives of the families of Heyrick, Farnham, Hazlerig, and Turvile. Every name, whether known or unknown, has been copied with the utmost care, and as much MS. besides as space allowed. The results are possibly more suggestive to the compilers than they can well be to others. But a careful comparison of them, together with a little knowledge of local history, will at least add to the human interest of a collection which, it is strange to reflect, was, when it was founded, a modern library, and is now a relic of the far-off past.

Two things only need further be said. First, the compilers desire to tender their warmest thanks to the Mayor and Corporation for the confidence reposed in them, especially to Mr. Alderman Sawday, Mr. Alderman Chitham, and the other members of the Estates Committee—as also to the late Town Clerk (Sir E. V. Hiley), the present Town Clerk (Mr. Pritchard), and his assistant (Mr. Payne), to Mr. Kirkby and Mr. Herne, the Librarians respectively of the Municipal Library and the Permanent Library, for their readiness to facilitate and help in every way a work which could not be done in a short time, and which needed help of many kinds. And next, remembering the endless possibilities of mistakes where so much detail has to be given, they desire, like the good printers of old, when apologizing for the ‘escapes’ in the press, to throw themselves on the mercy of their ‘good Readers’ and beg that ‘in their sayre charity’ they will pardon all.

At the end :

Good Reader, it may fall out, that in this booke some faults are escaped in the printing, by mistaking or misplacing the figures and other parts of the quotation. Which is no maruell in quotations of this nature, where many figures go together: and I myselfe being many miles, aboue 100, from the presse, that I could not helpe it. Neuerthelesse I will maintaine the quotation, for substance to be true, though the Printer may haue mistaken it: and learned men that will take so much paines, may find that which I intend, I doubt not, by their owne knowledge of the place, if the numbers of the quotation deceiue them. I know not whether there be any such defects yet or no: but this I admonish because the Papists, if they find an error in the printing of one of our bookes, use to exclaime as if an article of our faith were razed out: neuer remembering the like casualties of their owne. It is one thing if I haue wilfully forged or falsified a place, and another thing if the Printer only haue mistaken the quotation. The latter may be, but the former is not: as I will be ready to satisfie any that will charge me with it.

APPENDIX

The following MSS. and books are now kept in the Strong Room at the Town Hall, and can only be seen on application to the Town Clerk.

MSS.

CODEx LEICESTRENSIS. A cursive MS. of the Gospels.

The gift of Mr. Thomas Hayne. It bears the autograph of the donor, and in Greek characters that of William Chark.

The beginning is wanting and the last leaves are defective.

On the fly-leaf opposite the first page there is a note of its having been collated by Dr. Scrivener in 1855, followed by (1) a note on Apoc. xi. 9. p. 202; (2) by a reference in pencil to Dr. Scrivener's Introduction, &c., signed 'W. H. Simcox, Rector of Harlaxton'.

On the fly-leaf opposite the last page the following is written: 'Collated, Sep. 1866. Richard Smyth, M.A., Prof. Orient. Lit. London.'

On p. 203 there are marginal notes on a particular passage, first in an unknown hand, next by Dr. Tregelles, and lastly by one who only gives initials, 'O. T. D.'

The late Mr. Kelly has noted in pencil certain defects and injuries on folios 77, 86, and 201, besides the marginal annotations just mentioned.

BIBLIA LATINA, transcribed on Vellum.

At the end: 'W. Stanlay alio nōie Walne sc'psit.'

It is mutilated by the cutting away of parts of the pages which were not written upon, and in some cases this has slightly injured the writing itself.

The Royal Arms are stamped on the front and back, with the motto 'Honi soit', &c.

The following names are on the last page:—

p me Richardū Feterssen; Jhon Coke, John Stooone, Lestere.

WICLIFFII Epistolae Dominicales per annum. . 212 folios.

An English MS. Notes in a different hand occur here and there.

The original stamped leather binding remains to a great extent, but the volume has been re-backed and lettered 'Wycliffe's Sermons in MS.'

Miscellaneous MSS. of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Centuries collected into one volume.

A note in W. Kelly's hand states that Mr. T. Wright, F.S.A., read a description of the contents at the Archæological Congress in Leicester. The date 1870, first inserted, is erased and 1862 inserted.

- AENEAS TACTICUS (fl. c. 360 B.C.). A general of the Arcadians in Greece, who wrote a treatise on strategy which had wide currency in ancient times; the treatise has perished, but an epitome of it, made by one Cineas at the court of Pyrrhus, survives.
- AINSWORTH, Henry (1571-1623). Scholar of Caius College, Cambridge; leader of a separatist ('Brownist') congregation at Amsterdam, which he and Francis Johnson founded; sole or part author of the Confession of Faith of the People called Brownists; one of the most learned orientalists of his time.
- ALCUINUS (Albinus, Alcuin, Ealwhine), Flaccus (735-804). Born and educated at York; settled at the court of Charlemagne, and became his adviser in important educational reforms; abbot of Tours, 796.
- ALSTEDIUS, Joannes Henricus (1588-1638). A native of Herborn in Nassau; professor of philosophy and theology in his own country and later at Weissenburg in Transylvania, where he died; present at the synod of reformed theologians at Dort; a very prolific writer; 'he was industry itself, as his name (by anagram Sedulitas) suggests' (Jöcher).
- ALVARUS (Alvarez), Emmanuel (1526-1583). A Portuguese Jesuit; born in the island of Madeira; learned in Greek, Hebrew, and Latin; professor of Latin at Lisbon and Coimbra; his Latin Grammar (De Institutione Grammatica) was adopted in all the schools of his order.
- ALVERNUS, Gulielmus (Guillaume d'Auvergne) (d. 1249). Born at Aurillac in Auvergne; bishop of Paris, 1228; mathematician and Scholastic philosopher, antagonist of Averroës.
- AMAMA, Sixtinus (d. 1629). A native of western Frisia; educated at the University of Franeker; visited England (1613), and lived for some time in Exeter College, Oxford, teaching Hebrew in the University; returned to his country and became professor of Hebrew in his own university, where he lived till his death; he did much to spread the knowledge and to encourage the critical study of the Bible; the Censura Vulgatae was published as a specimen of his intended general censure of the Vulgate version (Chalmers).

AMBROSIUS (S.) (333-397). Born at Treves; consular prefect of Liguria and Aemilia, c. 370; bishop of Milan, 374; successful in opposing the Arian party; president of the council of Aquileia, 381; excommunicated the emperor Theodosius on account of the massacre of Thessalonica.

ANDREWES, Lancelot (1555-1626). Scholar and later fellow of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge; appointed fellow of the newly founded Jesus College, Oxford, 1576, but continued to reside and lecture at Cambridge; prebendary of S. Paul's; master of Pembroke Hall, 1589-1605; dean of Westminster, 1601; bishop of Chichester, Ely, and finally of Winchester; noted alike as preacher, writer, and administrator, and first on the list of the compilers of the Authorized Version.

ANGELUS, Christopher (d. 1638). A Greek, who came to England to avoid persecution, 1608; studied and taught at Cambridge and at Balliol College, Oxford; wrote among other works an Encomium Angliæ; 'a pure Grecian and an honest and harmless man' (Wood).

ANTHONINUS FLORENTINENSIS (1389-1459). A Florentine by birth; entered the Dominican order at a very early age; made archbishop of Florence at the request of the citizens, 1446; a writer on theology and ecclesiastical history, famed also for his pastoral activities; canonized in 1523.

ANTONINUS, Marcus Aurelius (121-180). Adopted son of Antoninus Pius, whom he succeeded as Emperor of Rome, 161; engaged most of his life in fighting on the frontiers against Parthians, Marcomanni, Quadi, &c.; ordered persecutions of the Christians, 166 and 177; his Reflections, or private journal, still extant, shows the Stoic philosophy of life in its most impressive form.

APPIANUS (fl. c. 140). A Greek of Alexandria, who lived in the reigns of Trajan, Adrian, and Antoninus; practised with distinction at the Roman Bar; and finally attained the rank of procurator in the imperial service; he wrote a History of Rome in 24 books, of which a great part survives.

APULEIUS, Lucius (fl. c. 160). Born at Madaura, on the borders of Roman North Africa, of a distinguished African family; studied at Carthage and at Athens, where he adopted whole-heartedly the Platonist philosophy; thence to Rome, where he went to the bar; after many travels and changes of fortune, he finally returned to his native country where he made a fortune in the law courts; he wrote much both in Greek and Latin; his most notable work is the Metamorphosis or Asinus Aureus ('Golden Ass'), which contains the famous fable of Cupid and Psyche.

AQUINAS, Thomas (S.) (1227-1274). An Italian Dominican; studied at Naples, Cologne, and Paris; taught at Paris, Rome, and Naples; gained a great reputation by his skill in disputation, and was known as 'Angel of the Schools', 'Eagle of Divines', 'Angelic Doctor', &c.; canonized, 1323; declared fifth doctor of the Church by Pius V; one of the greatest of the scholastic philosophers; died on his way to the second council of Lyons.

ARETIUS, Benedictus (d. 1574). Born at Berne; taught at Marburg; one of the founders of the science of botany, which he studied chiefly in connexion with the flora of the Alps; he also wrote on theology, and was in correspondence with most of the learned men of his time.

ARIAS MONTANUS, Benedictus (1527-1598). Son of a notary of Estremadura; educated in the university of Alcalá; accompanied the bishop of Segovia to the council of Trent, 1562; sent (1568) by Philip II to Antwerp to prepare a 'Polyglot' for Chr. Plantin, which he produced in 1572; accused before the Pope of altering the text of the Bible, but acquitted; refused the King's offer of a bishopric; given charge of the library of the Escorial; died, finally, in retirement at Seville; by temperament an ascetic and a hermit and one of the most learned theologians of the 16th century.

ARISTOTELES (Aristotle) (384-322 B.C.). Born at Stagira in Macedonia; attended the school of Plato at Athens; tutor to Alexander the Great at the court of his father, Philip of Macedon; in 331 returned to Athens and set up a school of philosophy for himself in the Lyceum, where he taught till his death; he founded what was known as the Peripatetic school of philosophy; many of his philosophic and scientific works have survived, and have exercised more influence upon thought than those of any other writer, ancient or modern.

ARMINIUS (Hermensen), Jacobus (1560-1609). Born at Oudewater in South Holland; studied at Leyden, Marburg, Geneva (under Beza), Basle (under Grynaeus); pastor of the reformed church at Amsterdam, 1588; professor of theology at Leyden, 1603; revolted against the popular Calvinism of his time, and founded the considerable party known after him as Arminians and condemned at the synod of Dort.

ARTHINGTON, Henry (fl. 1590). A Yorkshire gentleman, imposed upon by a fanatic named William Hacket, a native of Oundle, who gave himself out to be the Messiah; together they caused a riot in London and were imprisoned, 1591; Arthington's tract gives an account of the affair, with a dedication to the privy council and an appeal for his release from prison; he was released after a penitent apology. (See D. N. B. Hacket, W.)
